Directors & Managers Speak Out

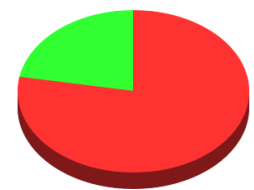

Physical, Occupational & Speech therapists are proud of the role they play in hospitals and the healthcare industry. Therapists are caring professionals who want the best results possible for the patients they treat. The therapy profession has come a long way in recent years. Today more and more physicians rely heavily on therapists to help get their patients well.

The therapy directors and managers we talk with want better communication with the physicians. They also want better communication with other therapists across the nation who are treating the same problems that they are. The therapists want to know benchmarking of what protocol in treatment gets the best results and they want it on a real time basis.

“It would be great if I could go to my computer and find out what is happening today in another part of the country as to who, how and what are the outcomes of the 5,000 similar patients with a similar problems that very same day – what is working best to get this patient well.”

Therapists say “we could be more effective and efficient therapists, directors, and managers if a system existed that gave us real time information to answer many of our questions concerning treatment”.
